Possible to use up to 7-8TB a month of internet on a hotspot?

2020/02/11

So I am having a debate with a friend and he's trying to tell me he uses up to 7-8TB of wireless data from his mobile hotspot from AT&T. Which, if let's, hypothetically say that for every hour he streams video, he pulls 3GB an hour. (Which is the hypothetical equivalent of nearly 2,333 hours of video in order to reach just 7TB, at a rate of 3GB/hour, and there is only 744 hours in a month with 31 days in it, and 2,333 hours is around 3 months, ish... so...) He says he typically uses 1-17 devices on it at once and most of them just like to update apps and backup their phones (around 15-20GB per backup), and then he'll stream videos and music a lot. He showed me a screenshot of his data usage and it says his current data pull from the last 57 minutes (since his last period) is around 7.4GB. Which would, yes, if going at that rate CONSTANTLY would end up being around 5,505.6GB or ~5.4-5.6TB. What do you guys think? Do you think it's possible for him to be pulling that much data? I personally stream YouTube, Netflix, music, I upload (YouTube and download videos and pictures a lot, I live-stream my videos sometimes, which can be an upward of 2-4 hours long, and that's just MY device, running at a speed of around 300mbps on wifi. Let alone my phone, everyone else's devices in the house, on 5G on a quad channel router. And total a month, we average about 200-300GB per month. Altogether. He's telling me that his hotspot alone pulls nearly 7-8TB... and his aunt or whatever has gigabit internet, and they pull even more data from that. What do you guys think?
